Passing by on West Stockbridge Road, geometric mounds rising from the roadside and trees behind cause one to turn in. Driving in the new northwest entrance, the visitor is met with a cascade of hills that aspire to the majesty of the Berkshire Mountains beyond. Drawing the eye inward onto the property, this gradient of meadow-covered mounds meets interlocked gradients of turf and pavers, guizing driving visitors toward the new Center House. Alternatively, pedestrians enter between walls of mounds at the existing crosswalk, processing through the gradual but staggered slopes and into the shade of the tamaracks toward the Center House. A gathering basin is embedded at the center of this new garden and offers a formal counterbalance to the small rise at the adjacent Vista Garden.
